An international conference organised by the CES research group on Urban Cultures, Sociabilities and Participation to critically and pragmatically explore the concept of ‘creative resilience’ and its application in academic research, civic society, and public policy. The conference aims to foreground the agency of cultural actors and practices, and the essential need for equitable and inclusive civic participation in collective transitions and transformations towards regenerative and resilient strategies and actions. It acknowledges the need to reexamine culture-nature relations in our lives, renew urban-rural cultural connections, and inform public dialogue on resilience, which guides contemporary public policies and interventions such as the Portuguese Recovery and Resilience Plan (2023-2026).

A call for sessions opened among the members of CULTURS sets out a framework for a series of discussions and research exchanges. Municipalities and other local and regional institutions will be invited to present their projects or contribute to roundtables and debates.

The call for papers is now open. We invite contributions from a wide array of disciplines, interdisciplinary and transdisciplinary collaborations – and projects and practices – to enrich and extend the conference themes in their conceptual and pragmatic dimensions.

Languages: Portuguese and English
